The Westward Journey
Intaglio Print featuring Journey's State Shields
Offered at American Numismatic Association (ANA) Show

The Bureau of Engraving and Printing (BEP) will exhibit at the American Numismatic Association (ANA) Show, August 18 - 22, 2004, at the David Lawrence Convention Center, Halls B & C, 1000 Fort Duquesne Blvd., Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania 15222.

THE ANA INTAGLIO PRINT

"The Westward Journey" Engravings of different state shields (or coats of arms) were used on the earliest issues of National Bank Notes. The shields were produced for the states in which national banks were chartered and were incorporated into the designs on the backs of National Bank Notes of the first and second charter periods.

National Bank Notes were issued between 1863 and 1938, and authorized by the National Currency Act of February 25, 1863 and the National Banking Act of June 3, 1864. As a result, banks were required to purchase and place U.S. government securities on deposit with the government in order to be chartered as "national banks" by the Comptroller of the Currency. As chartered national banks, these financial institutions could issue new, standardized notes that would be accepted and recognized by national banks across the country.

Prior to 1875, National Bank Notes were engraved and printed by private bank note companies. This was followed by a brief period where the work was accomplished by both the private firms and the BEP. Beginning in 1877, production of National Bank notes was carried out exclusively by the Bureau.
